HTTP vs HTTPS

HTTP and HTTPS are both protocols for transferring data between a web browser and a server, but HTTPS adds a layer of encryption using TLS. This encryption prevents third parties from reading or tampering with data in transit, which is essential for protecting passwords, payment details, and other sensitive information. Most modern browsers now flag plain HTTP sites as "not secure" to encourage the use of HTTPS.